Americans from the working poor to the traditionally affluent are living closer to the economic edge. One indicator is the growing swings in income from year to year that have put some families on a roller coaster and left them vulnerable to financial disaster. What's causing this new economic insecurity and what does it say about the level of financial risk assumed by average Americans? NOW profiles two families dealing with the downside of this new economic reality. One of the families, the Ryans from Wilmore, Kentucky, has lived through financial ups and downs during the last two decades. Their story serves as a cautionary tale for America's middle class. John Ryan, formerly a corporate lawyer now working at the University of Kentucky, has had eight jobs in the past decade--years of work, followed by lay-offs from downsizing. "When I meet someone who's lost a job...it breaks my heart all over again to think that they may have to go through the same challenges," says Ryan. In the report, David Brancaccio and LOS ANGELES TIMES national economics correspondent Peter Gosselin analyze a thirty-year pattern of cuts to benefits and worker protections that has shifted financial risks from government and business onto average Americans.

"John Bolton/Economy/War On Terror/Pope Benedict XVI" Will John Bolton be confirmed to represent the U.S. at the United Nations? Who is unsure of his suitability and what is the outlook for the nomination? Michael Duffy of TIME magazine provides analysis. Gas prices are high and stock values have taken a hit. Will the economy decide the fate of members of Congress who are up for re-election, or are social issues foremost in the minds of voters? Dan Balz of The Washington Post takes a look. The war on terror remains a political priority as the government prepared to accept a plea of "guilty" from Zacarias Moussaoui, the only person charged in a U.S. court for his role in the 2001 terrorist attacks. Pete Williams of NBC reports. The former Cardinal Ratzinger's ideas on issues from gay marriage to pro-choice candidates are well documented. What will be the pope's political influence in the U.S.? Barbara Bradley Haggerty of National Public Radio has the story.

Instead of trying fixed budgets, automatically save money each month, author David Bach said on our latest program. "If you get somebody to sign up for their 401(k) plan, save one hour a day of their income, then as their income goes up, they're still saving that same percentage," Bach said. "And that's what makes Americans on ordinary incomes wealthy." Also: See what's different about assisted living facilities.

With the nation's biggest banks about to finalize a record $1.4 billion settlement for securities violations, FRONTLINE investigates what New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer calls Wall Street's "corrupt business model" that cost American investors trillions. Tracing the stunning rise and fall of WorldCom, the hottest stock and then biggest bankruptcy of the 1990s, correspondent Hedrick Smith uncovers the hidden ties that enabled superbanks and Wall Street insiders to shape and profit from the telecom boom while leaving ordinary investors holding worthless stock when the bubble burst.

FRONTLINE offers two starkly contrasting images: one of empty storefronts in Circleville, Ohio, where the local TV manufacturing plant has closed down; the other, a sea of high rises in the South China boomtown of Shenzhen. The connection between American job losses and soaring Chinese exports? Wal-Mart. For Wal-Mart, China has become the cheapest, most reliable production platform in the world, the source of up to $25 billion in annual imports that help the company deliver everyday low prices to 100 million customers a week. But while some economists credit Wal-Mart's single-minded focus on low costs with helping contain U.S. inflation, others charge that the company is the main force driving the massive overseas shift to China in the production of American consumer goods, resulting in hundreds of thousands of lost jobs and a lower standard of living here at home.

Americans from the working poor to the traditionally affluent are living closer to the economic edge. One indicator is the growing swings in income from year to year that have put some families on a roller coaster and left them vulnerable to financial disaster. What's causing this new economic insecurity and what does it say about the level of financial risk assumed by average Americans? NOW profiles two families dealing with the downside of this new economic reality. One of the families, the Ryans from Wilmore, Kentucky, has lived through financial ups and downs during the last two decades. Their story serves as a cautionary tale for America's middle class. John Ryan, formerly a corporate lawyer now working at the University of Kentucky, has had eight jobs in the past decade--years of work, followed by lay-offs from downsizing. "When I meet someone who's lost a job...it breaks my heart all over again to think that they may have to go through the same challenges," says Ryan. In the report, David Brancaccio and LOS ANGELES TIMES national economics correspondent Peter Gosselin analyze a thirty-year pattern of cuts to benefits and worker protections that has shifted financial risks from government and business onto average Americans.

First off this week, host Bonnie Erbe and panelists discuss Equal Pay Day. Since last year, women's salaries have dropped to 76 cents for every dollar made by a man. Bonnie and the panelists discuss the veracity and the reasoning behind this. Then they turn to the concept of universal pre-school, proposed by Rob Reiner, and whether it would truly level the education gap of different economic backgrounds later in life. Finally, women at Spelman College protested a music video by hip-hop star Nelly and led to Essence Magazine's new campaign against the continued objectification of women in music videos. Panelists include Democratic commentator Irene Natividad, documentary filmmaker Shola Lynch, Michelle Bernard of the Independent Women's Forum, and Genevieve Wood of the Center for a Just Society.

FRONTLINE offers two starkly contrasting images: one of empty storefronts in Circleville, Ohio, where the local TV manufacturing plant has closed down; the other, a sea of high rises in the South China boomtown of Shenzhen. The connection between American job losses and soaring Chinese exports? Wal-Mart. For Wal-Mart, China has become the cheapest, most reliable production platform in the world, the source of up to $25 billion in annual imports that help the company deliver everyday low prices to 100 million customers a week. But while some economists credit Wal-Mart's single-minded focus on low costs with helping contain U.S. inflation, others charge that the company is the main force driving the massive overseas shift to China in the production of American consumer goods, resulting in hundreds of thousands of lost jobs and a lower standard of living here at home.

FRONTLINE returns to Iraq, this time to embed with Halliburton/KBR, and to take a hard look at private contractors, including Blackwater, Aegis, Erinys and Custer Battles, who play an increasingly critical role in running U.S. military supply lines, providing armed protection and operating U.S. military bases. These private warriors are targeted by insurgents and in turn have been criticized for their rough treatment of Iraqi civilians. Their dramatic story illuminates the Pentagon's new reliance on corporate outsourcing and raises tough questions about where they fit in the chain of command and the price we are paying for their role in the war.

For the first time ever, PBS airs an annual "The State of the Planet" special that will give viewers an up-to-date look at the current state of the environment. While celebrating the elegance of diversity and the rich tapestry of the natural world, this year's special explores how population and economic pressures affect that world and resources such as water and food. From Israel to Iowa, Bangladesh to the basins of the Rio Grande and the Amazon, Nairobi to Pennsylvania, the program crisscrosses the globe to visit places where environmental successes have occurred, as well as cities and villages where the quality of life continues to decline.

Cloud: Wild Stallion of the Rockies"--Filmed in the mountains of western Montana, this poignant, engrossing story focuses on an extraordinary wild stallion whose life has been recorded since his moment of birth in the wild by Emmy-winning filmmaker Ginger Kathrens. Ms. Kathrens' exceptional footage follows the striking white horse she names Cloud through a series of harrowing struggles and adventures, including expulsion from his own horse family, the rites of passage as he develops into a dominating stallion, his capture in a government roundup and subsequent release, the struggle to survive harsh winters and frequent summer lightning strikes, and the dangers posed by illegal horse shooters. As an illuminating visual record of the emergence of a natural leader, this is an unprecedented film about wild horses.

Alien species of plants and animals have invaded every continent. They have enormous powers; they spread disease; they devour buildings. Some are undermining the very land beneath our feet. Think of them as the first wave of an assault that could drive the greatest mass extinctions since the end of the dinosaurs. What is causing this invasion, and what can we do to stop the rising tide? Detectives usually break mysterious cases when they first see the connections among seemingly unrelated clues. Consider these: Dust clouds are building high over the Atlantic. An entire population of caribou is disappearing, their numbers getting smaller and smaller every year, while other species are pushed to the limits of their physical survival in the oceans. A respiratory illness, at one time uncommon among children in Trinidad, is now widespread. Many scientists believe that all of these disparate phenomena are connected to energy use, which is leading to a slow, planet-wide transformation - climate change.

Deep in the wilds of Venezuela, the natural order is being turned inside out. Miles of verdant forest have given way to scrawny, disfigured islands, some of them overrun by bands of voracious howler monkeys, a glut of iguanas and hordes of ravenous ants. What is driving this transformation? A team of scientists believes that life here is running amok because top predators are gone. Similarly, the majestic wilderness of Yellowstone National Park is showing signs of change from the depletion of natural predators. Familiar and revered forests have vanished. Researchers have recently made an amazing discovery linking these forest losses to the expulsion of the gray wolf some 70 years ago. In the American heartland, there have been strange disappearances. Frogs are vanishing without a trace. Further north, in the green waters of Canada's St. Lawrence River, beluga whales are mysteriously dying - their white corpses found washed up on the stony shores. A world away on the Great Barrier Reef, swarms of monstrous sea stars are overrunning this marine paradise. At first glance, these stories seem unrelated. But in fact, scientists suspect they may be part of a worldwide transformation brought on by toxins in the water. Have Earth's vibrant waterways become massive delivery systems for invisible poisons? Are some of these poisons reaching our faucets?

Italian primatologist Chloe Chipoletta tries to make the first human contact with lowland gorillas in the remote African forests of the Congo. Similar contact with other great apes by experts like David Watts in Uganda has revealed where our ability to use tools came from. We discover that even our cherished notions of being the only animal capable of sophisticated culture are false when we witness capuchin monkeys in Brazil with the rudiments of culture. American archaeologists Rene Munoz and Charles Golden, working in the forests of Guatemala, and British archaeologist Charles Higham working in Cambodia are studying the ruins of lost civilizations searching for answers to one question: what happens when we turn the skills we inherited from our primate past against the forest? The fate of these civilizations offers us a powerful lesson about our own future and the future of the jungle.

But HUNT FOR THE SUPERTWISTER is much more than just another "extreme weather" show. Our story focuses on the efforts of two scientists at the University of Oklahoma to develop radically different approaches to forecasting twisters: one relies on "virtual tornados" created inside supercomputers, while the other involves hunting down real-life storms to collect data firsthand (the method that inspired the movie Twister). With jaw-dropping 3-D graphics generated by the National Center for Supercomputing Applications, NOVA's show features spectacular footage of these terrifying twisters. HUNT FOR THE SUPERTWISTER gives viewers a front-row seat to the risky and thrilling art of storm chasing, complete with the latest research findings and state-of-the-art visual effects.

Earth is the only known planet in the universe that supports life. The planet is ever-changing and embodies monumental forces that are immeasurable. Yet even with its immense power, life prevails -- and from the first glimmer of human consciousness, people have felt a need to explain the world in which they live. Delving into the origins of the solar system and Earth, "Forces of the Wild" explores the beginnings of life. This is the story of how life has transformed the planet, but is still guided by the elemental forces -- how smoke beetles use fire, how geese navigate by the Earth's magnetic field -- and how delicate the balance is between these forces that make life on Earth flourish.

Fast forward to the year 2050.... Will it be a world of sharp, unpredictable climate swings, devastating mass extinctions of plants and animals, chronic shortages of water, and unparalleled human poverty and hunger? Or will it be a world where nature's biological treasures are protected, all children get to attend school, and basic human needs are satisfied? This two-part NOVA special explores the possibility that we still have the power -- and a brief period of time -- to turn the Earth away from a gloomy destiny. Through the use of dramatic scenarios, these programs will present crucial population and environmental issues to viewers in a fresh and accessible style. Scenarios are stories about the future, grounded in good science but told with the creativity of a feature film. They will give viewers a way to imagine the world -- to project from present trends while revealing decision points that will shape the future for our children and grandchildren. The scenarios interweave with worldwide investigative reports on reproductive health, population, biodiversity, and the future of the world's food supply. Each report will explore the trends that are driving each scenario, and the options we have for achieving - or avoiding - the outcome.

Alien species of plants and animals have invaded every continent. They have enormous powers; they spread disease; they devour buildings. Some are undermining the very land beneath our feet. Think of them as the first wave of an assault that could drive the greatest mass extinctions since the end of the dinosaurs. What is causing this invasion, and what can we do to stop the rising tide? Detectives usually break mysterious cases when they first see the connections among seemingly unrelated clues. Consider these: Dust clouds are building high over the Atlantic. An entire population of caribou is disappearing, their numbers getting smaller and smaller every year, while other species are pushed to the limits of their physical survival in the oceans. A respiratory illness, at one time uncommon among children in Trinidad, is now widespread. Many scientists believe that all of these disparate phenomena are connected to energy use, which is leading to a slow, planet-wide transformation

- climate change.

If you're retired and your former company is paying all or part of your health benefits, then you might want to dig out your old paperwork, put on your glasses (while you can still afford them) and read the fine print. Why? More and more retirees are finding themselves in court to save the health benefits they thought they were promised. And, judging by the decisions returned in a spate of cases, fine print trumps all. For many retirees, paying the soaring costs of healthcare is possible only with the help of their company's retirement package-benefits they counted on for life. Today, many companies are moving to slash benefits and shift costs to retirees, forcing some to drop out of coverage and others into court to save their benefits. How are these companies getting away with it? Corporate lawyers are filing preemptive lawsuits against former employees and relying on creative interpretations of fine print to make their case in court with greater and greater success. NOW goes inside the legal wrangling underway and tells the stories of workers and executives who say these companies are reneging on a promise and putting profits before people.

In this intimate portrait, several dwarfs who appeared in Jan Krawitz and Thomas Ott's 1982 film Little People welcome the camera into their lives once again. Through a prism of "then and now," the characters in the film confront physical and emotional challenges with humor, grace and, sometimes, frustration. What is it like to date or find a spouse? What about the decision to have children - with a 75 percent chance that their offspring will be a dwarf? And what does the future hold now that many genetic conditions, including dwarfism, can be diagnosed in utero? "Big Enough" provides a unique perspective on a proud and active community that many people know only from cultural stereotypes.

President George W. Bush called him "the architect" of his re-election victory. He has been Bush's chief strategist from the beginning, but Karl Rove is much more than a political guru - he is also the single most powerful policy advisor in the White House. FRONTLINE and The Washington Post join forces to trace the political history and modus operandi of the man who has been on the inside of every political and policy decision of the Bush administration, including the current battles on Social Security, taxes and tort reform. For Rove, observers say, enactment of the Bush agenda is a way to win the biggest prize of all - a permanent Republican majority.

For years, the government has used the power of eminent domain to take private property for so-called "public uses," things like building roads, schools, and police stations. But today, cash-strapped cities and towns are arguing that the economic benefits of private development are a legitimate "public use," and they're using eminent domain to force people out of their homes to make way for casinos, condos, and shopping malls. On Thursday, the US Supreme Court decided that local governments may seize people's homes and businesses against their will for private development. The decision has far-reaching consequences in communities around the nation where some families' homes are slated for destruction. The report examines what some have called "an unholy alliance" between financially stressed cities and eager developers that is endangering the rights of homeowners across the country. Members of Congress from both parties are now calling for an independent investigation into possible abuses at Guantanamo. But even with the painful lessons learned from Abu Ghraib, the White House says "no." Civil rights crusader and regular NOW contributor Constance Rice says that there are parallels between the treatment of prisoners in American prisons, those in Abu Ghraib, and the prison camp at Guantanamo that are instructive. "Am I saying that our prisons are as bad as Abu Ghraib? No," she says. "But do we have conditions that are illegal, unconstitutional and cruel and unusual? Yes."
